La Salle University receives grant from the PA Dept. of Education's Link-to-Learn Program for new Information Technology Major

PHILADELPHIA – La Salle University recently received a $84,882 grant from the Pennsylvania Department of Education's Link-to-Learn Program to support the development and implementation of its new Information Technology major (IT). The grant was given as part of the state's Information Technology Workforce Development initiative.

This grant will give faculty members the resources to prepare course syllabi, lectures, instructional materials and laboratory assignments for the six new courses that will be developed and offered as part of the IT major.

Some of these courses include Introduction to Information Technology, Client Support Systems, LANs and Network Administration, Applied Operating Systems and Distributed Systems, and Telecommunications and Telephony.

The grant will also be used to purchase hardware and software for Information Technology laboratories. The labs will include 25 standalone network PCs, ten client machines, one server, three Mini-Hubs, and seven Imac's. The software will include five Windows NT client/server licenses and five Novell Netware licenses.

"I am very happy La Salle was awarded this grant! It allows us to continue the development of our state-of-the-art Information Technology program by enhancing our facilities as well as course development," said Linda Elliott, chair of the Math/Computer Science Department and program director. "As the IT program grows, we hope that our graduates will enter the profession and make immediate and significant contributions."

La Salle's IT program has grown out of the University's B.A. and B.S. Programs in Computer Science. While the new IT majors will share many computer science courses with computer science majors during their first two years, they will take courses specific to the field of information technology during their junior and senior years.

Link-to-Learn/Add One

The IT major will provide technical computer science training to computer-oriented students who are interested in the basics of computer information science, but with specific interest in information technology, including areas of networks, client support systems, and telecommunications. Graduates of this program can become specialists for hardware and software support, network design and administration, and have general computer consulting capabilities.

Link-to-Learn is Pennsylvania Governor Tom Ridge's multi-year, $166 million initiative to expand the use of technology in the classroom, including new and upgraded computers for schools and high-tech training for teachers.

Link-to-Learn's Information Technology Workforce Development is a statewide, competitive funding initiative designed to enable higher education institutions to attract, retain and graduate information technology students with the knowledge and skills that match the needs of Pennsylvania employers.

La Salle is a comprehensive, coeducational university established in 1863 by the Christian Brothers, a Roman Catholic teaching order. Today, the university educates more than 6,500 undergraduate and graduate students in nearly 60 academic disciplines at its four campuses in Philadelphia and the surrounding counties. One of seven Christian Brother colleges and universities in America and one of 72 around the world, La Salle is built on a strong tradition of quality education, service to students and overall excellence.
